A great overview. It is a part of a bigger site called "Growing A Nation," for assisting teachers. One can view it by time period or categories such as economic cycles, farm economy, farmers and the land, life on the farm, and farm organizations and movements. It covers from the 17th Century up to the year 2000.

Plante, Trevor K. "An Overview of Records at the National Archives Relating to Military Service." Prologue 34 (2002): 230-239.
Provides introductory information for doing genealogical research at the National Archives on ancestors who served in the US armed forces. The National Archives Building, Washington, D.C., and the National Personnel Records Center, St. Louis, Missouri, are the main repositories of military service records. Records are available for volunteers and regular army, navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard for officers and enlisted men. Muster rolls and pay vouchers are archived along with the records produced by courts-martial, hospitalization, and deaths. Pension records, bounty land warrant forms, and Confederate Army records are also available. The National Archives provides materials on microfilm and has Web site information, printed guides, and forms.

Butler, Stuart L. "Genealogical Records of the War of 1812." Prologue 23 (1991): 420-425.
Discusses National Archives records created during and after the War of 1812 that offer the genealogist a rich source of family information. Various offices of the War, Interior, and State departments created these records in response to specific federal laws, but most records of importance to genealogy from the War of 1812 era were created by the War Department, especially the Adjutant General's Office. The pension application files of the Veterans Administration are a particularly rich source of genealogical information.

Bacon, Lee D. "Early Naval Personnel Records at the National Archives, 1776-1860." Prologue 27 (1995): 76-80.

Discusses pre-1861 naval personnel records as a useful information source for genealogical research, including volunteer military service records and pension records. Pension records are more likely than military service records to contain genealogical information because a dependent had to prove his or her relationship to the veteran. From these records such information as the sailor's name and rank, name of the ship and period of service, and the sailor's date of birth or age and place of residence are retrievable. The author provides an example of research strategies in searching records relating to the naval service of a veteran with 33 years of experience. .
